fast fixes

- Store blankets in zippered clear vinyl and cotton bags so you can easily see what's inside while also protecting against pests and dust.
- Stash bulky items such as comforters, extra pillows and bedspreads in bins or hampers on the closet floor.
- Place smaller toiletries and soaps in baskets or boxes within easy reach.
- Label each shelf with adhesive tape that lists its contents, including sheet and pillowcase sizes and what's out of sight or in containers.
- Sort towels by type—use shelf dividers to keep them in tall, neat stacks.

the strategy: linen closet

If your linen closet is suffering from anarchy, Ann Sullivan of Organizing People for Life suggests that you first decide what doesn't belong. "Eliminate any item that you never use," she says. What stays: all bed sheets, pillows, towels and extra toiletries. Next, assess your space. If removing or adding shelves is more than you want to tackle, devise your own system of baskets, shelf dividers and boxes. Divide linens according to type (king or twin) and, if needed, usage (master bath or kids' rooms). Frequently used linens and toiletries should be stored at eye level, while seasonal or special-occasion ones should be stored on the top shelves.
